COULDN'T BUILD IT. It is very doubtful if the city of Wich ita could build its own street railway system. The city is said to be bonded almost to the limit allowed by law.

ABOUT THE INDIANS. Frank Burt says that the first thing when he acrived at the Pennsylvania camp, the officers began to ask him about Indians. They considered Wichits very far west.

TO WRECK THE TRUSTS. A Wichita man has a great scheme by which he proposes to wreck the tobacco trust. He proposes to form a society known as the "Anti-Trust Total Abstinence Association," Each man who Joins pledges bimself not to chew tobac-The idea is that this will cut off cales to such an extent that the trusts will go down in bankrupey. His plan is to make the association a national one.

A LIAR'S DREAM.

Years ago, on a fearfully stormy night late in the fall, when Wichita was a lively trading post and frontier headquarters for cattlemen, picturesque cowunchers and tradesmen, a solitary horseman rode furiously through the one long street of this city, coming in from the south and riding directly west. He heeded not the raging storm or the curious gaze who had gathered about the front door of the several dance halls; saloons and gambling quarters. Straight across the louging avenue long bridge he rode and inted before the brilliantly lighted 'Iron-Clad." He throw the bridle of his naming broncho over the worn out aninal's head and walked with firm step to his knock he simply asked for "Rianche She was not there, and the man rode though he had not been seen all furing that day. Then the girl was there. Man and suffocating dance room, with fames of had liquor permeating the heated hall, and amid the joud baughter and and 1k. boisterous talk of the mandlin habituse.

For one long moment the two stood gazother, both transfixed, and each wishing the other was not in the mine realm of a hundred square miles Neither spoke and only one showed signs of any emotion, and that was the handsome though roughly-clad man. The girl might have been seen to wince slightly as she first met the penetrating gaze of her interviewer, but this gave way to a world. stolid, almost fierce and defiant look of only a few were watching the ellent yet nitense scene. The girl was deadly pule, upon purchasing we can hand them to you and defiance, was clearly affected and beyoud her own control. The man was a pallor which told of a terrible struccle inside. His line curled a little with a smile of bilierest ween a sort of intermingling of hate, sorrow, disgust and latent hope, for after all hope really never dies so long as life thrills the finer sensea. He was the first to speak, and slowly and clearly he spoke through the din of the stated intently at each other, and then livery of the ticket on the other side. the man made an advancement as though was at once repulsed and she stepped back. The strain was too great and she never had been natural with her, and giving a fourned took around she motioned the packed hall for the cool and bracing grass and sure brush on the measurcless meeting was not more than simply tragic. First prize, $250; second prize, $100; third perhaps, in the eyes of the critic, it was prize, $20. in that neighborhood. Now after ten wrecked and made miserable by the ish ungenerous jealousy of a frenzied but adoring husband. Now in the frontier trading post away across the trackless plains, they two met and it was a stormy night. For one brief but holy momen out there amidst the driving storm the man and the woman were clasped in each others last but fond and sucred embraco. Then in shame and bitter remorse he broke away from her with a kiss of burning, intense arder, for old-time and first-born love had mounted for that one fleeting second of time, the place where hate had been, and cruel misjudging. Then he broke from the clinging arms of his one brusted girl wife, she to whom he had promised fidelity at the ultur, and who in turn, had sworn to cherish and love and mounting his tired and jaded pony flaw into the mists of the sweeping storm and was soon lost amid the sleet, the gale ridden snow crystals, and the howling wind. Dumfounded and horror stricken, the woman who was better than her class sank down and to the drug-steeped crowd within was lost and forgotten. The next morning in the dim light of the gray day they found her so allent and so cold, and yet, wreathed about those pinched and pallid lips was a frozen smile of aimos seraphic leveliness, the image which death leaves of a better nature, a finer spiri a nobler womanhood. Down the bank of the river about where Maple Street bridge now stretches across the empt hed, a pony was found standing close t a cottonwood tree and on him in military dignity and carriage sat erect and patient the rider. He might have been there for hours, perhaps for a few moments only The leader of the searching party touche his giove of ice which grasped the bridle and gently shock him. He paid no heed and seemingly was fully dreaming as he looked away across the draw and into the stretches of those illimitable spaces between here and there. Then they saw he was dead. Perhaps the pony had known gone, and his secret he kept a faithful companion to the master who knew him the city, the two, the man and the woman lay side by side in a vacant store room hand was a pure white handkerchief, the last insignla of purity which the outcas claimed. They tore it from his rigid fir goes and on a corner was embroidered the one name, in blue silk, "Blanche, Both occupy a single grave over on the dropped the bird and never went rear it island in the Little River, and over the pine board for some years might be dimly discerned the line, "Poor Magdalene, gla loved and lost, a daughter of Herod,"
